THE COMMISSION PROCESS

First the artist and client discuss the intended subject(s), artwork size, and any other considerations, such as intended mood or where the artwork will hang.

The artist generally meets the subject in person in order to take photo reference and/or paint from life. In some cases, it is possible to work from your photographs if an in-person meeting is not an option.

The artist proposes multiple options for compositions, in some cases combining several photographs and altering details to create the best overall image. The client provides input and selects their favorite composition.

Master Copy of Repin's Alexey Pisemsky, charcoal and white chalk on paper

Reverie, 20x16 oil on linen

At the approval of the composition and project plan, 50% deposit is paid and painting begins. As the project nears completion, the client may provide feedback to the artist. Minor adjustments may be made in line with the initial plan to ensure likeness and client satisfaction.

Payment is made in full upon approval of the painting, at the time of delivery. If the client is not completely satisfied with the painting, they are under no obligation to pay the balance and the artist keeps the painting.
